

TRAINING ANNOUNCEMENT

Radicalisation – how to identify and effectively handle the cases

17-18 November 2026
On-site: Torremolinos, Spain

Languages: English

Identifying and responding to radicalisation requires careful assessment of behaviour, context and risk, as well as effective coordination across services. This 1.5-day training will equip experienced frontline practitioners and multi-agency professionals with practical skills, analytical tools to identify, assess and respond to cases of radicalisation and violent extremism in both online and offline environments.

The training will address key aspects of case identification and management, including understanding radicalisation processes, recognising relevant indicators, assessing risk and vulnerability, designing tailored responses and strengthening multi-agency cooperation.

The programme will combine research-informed expert input with case studies, practical exercises, small-group simulations and peer exchange. Participants will have opportunities to apply the approaches introduced during the training to realistic scenarios and practise making decisions as new information emerges.

WHO CAN PARTICIPATE

This training is designed for frontline practitioners and multi-agency professionals with at least 3 years of experience in an area related to the scope of the training.

Relevant professional profile may include, among others, police officers and community policing teams, social workers and family support specialists, youth workers, refugee support staff, school liaison officers, teachers and educators, school psychologists, healthcare and mental health practitioners and other professionals involved in preventing and responding to radicalisation.

WHAT YOU WILL LEARN

By the end of this training, participants will be able to:

- Identify processes of radicalisation in their own field of work, in both online and offline contexts.
- Apply tools for identifying radicalisation indicators and assessing risk.
- Contribute to the development of appropriate, tailored responses to identified cases of extremism.
- Cooperate with relevant professionals and services in identifying and handling cases of radicalisation.
